Invesco Further Strengthens U.S. Institutional Sales and Client Service Team; T. J. Hughes Joins as Managing Director

Contact: Bill Hensel, 404-479-2886

Atlanta, June 8, 2009 -- In a move that further strengthens its ability to market Invesco's broad range of investment capabilities, Invesco today announced that Thomas J. Hughes has joined its Institutional Sales and Client Service team as managing director. He will be responsible for marketing Invesco's investment strategies primarily to insurance companies, corporations, endowments and foundations. He joins from Morgan Stanley Investment Management where he was managing director, head of the financial institutions channel. Hughes is based in Boston and reports to Ben Utt.

"We are thrilled to have T.J. Hughes, a recognized leader with years of proven experience, join our Sales & Service team," said Jack Markwalter, Head of U.S. Institutional Sales, Client Service & Consultant Relations. "T.J. has the ideal skill set and personal attributes to further accelerate our strategy of strengthening our distribution efforts to institutional investors."

As part of this ongoing strategy, Invesco added several key professionals in 2008 including Brian Baskir as head of consultant relations and Lance Beck and Michael Mondo as senior sales professionals. The recent addition of Mr. Hughes is a continuation of Invesco's commitment to strengthen its U.S. Distribution capabilities.

Most recently Mr. Hughes was managing director, head of the financial institutions channel at Morgan Stanley Investment Management. He began his career as a fixed income analyst with Northern Trust and later worked in corporate treasury for Continental Illinois National Bank, including over five years of overseas assignments. Previously he was managing director, BankBoston.

Hughes earned a B.A. in Economics from University of Notre Dame and an MBA from DePaul University.
